Ans :

Protection of Wildlife

Wildlife is important to maintain the ecological balance of nature and maintains the food chain. It provides useful substances and wild animal product. But unfortunately, human's ever-increasing demands and greed that have led to deforestation and habitat destruction. For development and urbanization, man has chopped down trees to build dams, highways, and towns and this has forced the animals to retreat further and further into the receding forests. Poachers kill the animals for the illegal trading of their body parts. As a result of that, the ecosystem and the balance of nature is deteriorating. The wildlife is an important factor of our ecosystem, without their existence, the ecological balance will turn to an imbalanced state. Though we have wildlife conservation laws in the country it has not reduced the destruction of wildlife as expected. People need to feel the importance of wildlife and try to protect it from being destroyed.
